HE following Properties belonging to the Estate of DEER & Co.
At Hankow.—The Property at present
occupied by Messrs. EVANS & RAINBOW, consisting of a Dwelling House, with Servants' Office and Stables and three Go-downs each 150 feet by 60.
The situation of this Property outside the British concession, its river frontage of 320 feet and extensive Godown accommodation makes it one of the most valuable at Hankow especially for steam boat purposes.
At Kinkiang.—Four Lots on the British Concession with a frontage of 232 feet on the river bank. The buildings consist of a Dwelling House, with Servants' Office, and two Godowns 100 feet by 60 and 105
feet by 60 on the front Lots, and of a Go-down 125 feet by 60 feet on the back Lot.

PASSING PLEASURES.

These blessed passing pleasures!
We need not let them waste,
We need not leave their treasures
Behind us in our haste.
We need not doubt their fitness
Where earth's deep shadows fall;
God giving, He is witness
That we shall want them all.
And the old adage
Of human shame and sin,
If He gives glories of glory
We ought to let them in.
And oh, when brought before us
Where heart and soul can see,
How mighty to restore us
Love's little signs may be!
A bird, a tree, a flower,
A creature just as frail,
Will take us in His power
To Him within the veil;
Will come, if He has bidden,
Amidst the darkening night,
And leave us safely hidden
Behind a shield of light.
Perhaps His angels see us
Disquieted in vain;
Perhaps His watch would free us
From some ensuring pain;
But only He can measure
The rest our hearts have through
The good that in His pleasure
A passing joy may do.
If but for one bright minute
Through gathering clouds it break,
There is a token in it
That He would have us take.
And His least sign obeying,
No wealth our hearts shall miss,
Even when we hear Him saying,
"See greater things than this!"
For He the dull ear gaining
Meeting the dim weak sight,
Our faith is gently training
To bear the perfect light.
And while His mercies guide us,
We in our sure belief
May trust the joy beside us
Even as we trust the grief.
—Good Words.

Moral virtues are durable, and therefore products, only as far as they are derived from religious belief, and are the consequence of it. Without that, all morals are built on a sandy foundation, and are liable to be swept away by the flood of strong temptation. Morality cannot stand long without the aid of religion, and the more moralist in a time of affliction may learn to know that the only refuge in sorrow and in trial are the Rock of Ages and the promises of the Gospel.

LYING.—Lying is a disgraceful vice, and one that Plutarch paints in most disgraceful colours; when he says that it is "affording testimony that one first despises God, and then fears men." It is not possible more happily to describe its horrible, disgusting, and abandoned nature; for can we imagine anything more vile than to be covetous with regard to men, and daring with regard to God?—Montaigne.

PASSAGE OF LIFE.—If we die to-day, the sun will shine as brightly and the birds sing as sweetly to-morrow. Business will not be suspended a moment, and the great mass will not bestow a thought upon our memories. Is he dead? will be the solemn inquiry of a few as they pass to their work. But no one will miss us except our immediate connections, and in a short time they will forget us, and laugh at us as they see us in the next life, pass away. Our children crowd close behind us, and they will soon be gone. In a few years not a living being can say, "I remember him." We lived in another age, and did business with those who slumber in the tomb. This is life! How rapidly it passes.

HAD it been for us to be using exaggerated words about our own villainies which we cannot feel, it is not one of the most wholesome lessons which a man can learn, to be inwardly and practically convinced that he cannot be what he would. To make the best of defeat is better generally than to lose the head with success; and such will ever be the tactics of the practical Christian man. The enemy means, that failure shall strike dismay. Let us not carry out the enemy's desire. To "commit the keeping of the soul to our faithful Creator," sounds a very common-place word; but it is, in fact, one of the most important lessons. On the one side lies torpor, indifference to failure, acquiescence in short-comings; on the other, his fretfulness and uncertainty, and his constant accompaniments, indecision, and unprofitableness.—The Dean of Canterbury.

MR. FORSTER ON THE AMERICAN QUESTION.

(Pall Mall Gazette, May 22)

Mr. Forster must certainly be passionately in love with work, if he told his constituents at Bradford yesterday, "there is more life and more youth given to one by such a meeting" as the one he addressed, "than by anything else can find on the ground." This, however, is a question for himself alone. The public in general are bound to admit that he has employed what may be fitly called his vacation after a fashion which to them at least is highly useful. His speech at Leeds about education was a good one, but the whole tone and temper of his speech at Bradford appears to us excellent, whilst it is impossible not to feel that the argument which it embodies must go far to convince every one who is capable of weighing the subject coolly that in the particular matter just now in dispute between this country and the United States we are so completely in the right that it is practically impossible for us to point to discuss the question. Mr. Forster points out what is undeniably true, that he personally has always been conspicuous as one of the most unqualified and thoroughgoing adherents in this country of the Northern side of the American question, and he declares that as such he was not only strongly in favour of the neutral proclamation which has given such intense offence to the Americans, but used his own influence to obtain it. He says, "I most earnestly desired that proclamation, and did all I could to obtain it. In fact, it is, as I stated last year in the House of Commons, that at that moment I had only just been returned by you, and although I was then an unfortunat member, I felt it my duty to put myself forward more than otherwise I could have felt I had a right to do, in putting questions to Ministers on the subject, and bringing it before them, and the real fact is that the first statement that there should be a proclamation issued was made in answer to a question of mine by Sir George Lewis, the then Home Secretary."

He goes on to explain that the reason why he wished for the proclamation was that he feared that in its passage privateers would sail from English ports under Southern letters of marque, and that the principles of international law would permit our Government to treat them as pirates if they did. He goes on to point out at some length the injustice of those who insist on judging the feelings of the English people towards America at that time, by the behaviour and language of a comparatively small part of the community, and dwells in particular on the inconsistency of the Americans, who, notwithstanding their democratic principles, insist on identifying England at large with the fashionable London world, and leaving out of the account altogether the sentiments which prevailed under circumstances of peculiar trial and hardship amongst the working people of Lancashire and Yorkshire. Finally, he reminds the Americans that if the English nation, in its public and general capacity, had been really hostile to them nothing would have been easier than to accept the invitation of the French Emperor to recognize the South, a measure which, if it had not broken up the Union, would, at all events, have greatly prolonged the war and increased the expense. There is not a word in the speech which is not thoroughly friendly and cordial towards America. It concludes, indeed, with a repetition of the established commonplace—as true as they are commonplace—about the importance to the peace of the world of a firm and unbroken alliance between the two countries, but its general tone is just what it should be, firm, fairly, and simple-minded; dealing with the whole question as one of straightforward common sense between two communities of rational beings, the reflecting part of which, at all events, ought to be above the miserable littleness of treating matters involving the deepest interests of that section of the human race to which they belong as inflated sentiment and appeals to national vanity. It is only necessary to read the newspapers and to look at the caricatures which fill our shop windows in order to appreciate the unpleasant truth contained in the cynical observation that our common language and common descent are after all the great obstacles to the establishment and preservation of a good understanding between Great Britain and the United States. Whatever we have done with respect to the Americans the French have done also, and as Mr. Forster opportunely remarks, there is nothing but our refusal of their invitation to recognize the South which saved the North from a contest far more trying and doubtful than that in which they were actually engaged; yet neither Mr. Sumner nor any one else lifts his voice against France, or thinks it necessary to propose to send in to the French a little bill for a few hundred millions' sterling. The reason is obvious enough. There is no sting to an American in an unfriendly act on the part of the French, nor have they any claim upon the French for special consideration or sympathy. The fact that it is otherwise with us cannot, of course, be helped. For good and for evil the two nations are, and always must remain, connected together after a manner to which hardly anything else in the whole world affords such analogy. There are however, some things which we can and which we ought to help.

We can follow the excellent advice which Balak gave to Balaam on a memorable occasion, "Neither bless them at all nor curse them at all." Blessing and cursing, indeed, have succeeded equally ill with us. A good many of us, and in particular several of our most important newspapers, have tried their hands at each process, and as they nursed them when they were in difficulties and blessed them as they returned to prosperity, it may naturally be supposed that both the blessing power and the cursing power were at a maximum when they were exerted. Since our press ceased to occupy itself with the subject, Mr. Forster Johnson took up the wondrous tale, and his precious blame appears to have excited a corresponding desire in his countrymen to break the heads upon which they were poured. Mr. Sumner, again, has excited more or less of a cursing fit on this side of the Atlantic, and has called forth a whole crop of caricatures, in which the sturdy Briton is defying his truculent and sallow antagonist, and refusing to eat humble pie, to say nothing of leading articles in the most serious philosophical and philosophical American of English journals, which count up in an amiable way the injuries which in case of war England could inflict upon the United States, and estimate the chances of our being able to break up the Union, which, it is insinuated, is not by any means so thoroughly healed of its various wounds as its friends may suppose it to be. All this cannot exactly be described as calculated to promote friendship and good will between the two countries. What then, it may be said, do you recommend? Simply that matters of business should be treated as such, and that England and the United States should, as far as they possibly can, cease to make invidious remarks about each other, to draw comparisons between each other's institutions and national characters, and, in a word, to rub each other's backs the wrong way. Let us do our best to cultivate a judicious indifference, and to forget, if possible, all about our common language and our common Shakespeare, and the Virgin Fathers, and the great Anglo-Saxon race, and the English-speaking nations, and all the rest of it; and let us, if possible, learn to see in each other a considerable number of millions of reasonable human creatures who by the nature of things are obliged to have a vast deal of intercourse with, whether they like it or not, must visit each other, trade with each other, follow the same sorts of subjects, take interest in the same sorts of subjects, read the same sort of books, and in general live the same sort of life. All this, together with practical motives too obvious to dwell upon, affords excellent reasons for keeping the peace, but no reason at all for troubling ourselves much about what we think of or feel towards each other. Take two commonplace English counties, which have no special relation—say Norfolk and Devonshire. The inhabitants of the two are so much alike as to be practically indistinguishable. They live in every one of the particulars mentioned above just the same life. They trade with each other, visit each other, and in a thousand ways closely connected. But no Norfolk or Devonshire man frets himself about the feelings or temper of Devonshire or Norfolk. The Norfolk and Exeter papers do not exchange defiance or publish disquisitions upon the respective merits of the two counties. Surely this is the right attitude for nations as well as counties.

Let us judiciously let each other alone, look after our own affairs, and if questions happen to arise between us let us discuss them sensibly and quietly in the spirit of equality and mutual respect. It is simply impossible to imagine a state of things more undignified, useless, and generally contemptible than one in which two great nations are continually strutting about, showing their muscles, making invidious comparisons between their respective national characters and institutions, and at intervals falling into each other's arms and swearing eternal friendship. With all the talk about English goodness and the like, we are often inclined to think that England and the United States are two of the most mental and susceptible nations in the whole world. It is earnestly to be wished that they would cultivate more businesslike feelings.

THE GOLD-FIELDS OF SUTHERLANDSHIRE.

A Correspondent of the Illustrated London News says:

There out of mind there has been a tradition that gold as well as silver was to be found in the far west of Scotland; and especially in the county of Sutherland—so named because it was the southern portion of the old diocese of Caithness. Sir Robert Gordon, in his history of the family of Sutherland, says that gold existed in Sutherland, now generally called Durness, in the north-west of the county; and pieces of gold have occasionally been picked up in the strath or valley of Kildonan, one of which was sufficient to make a large massive ring for the late Duke of Sutherland, by whom and by his successor it was often worn. No attempt was made, however, until very recently to test the extent or value of the gold-fields, when it came about in this way.

A native of the district of Kildonan, named Gilchrist, like many another sturdy Highlander, won his fortune at the Australian diggings, and won her there; but his heart had a warm side for the old home among the hills of Sutherland. He could not help observing that the natural formation of the district, and particularly the every part of the coast, corresponded in every particular with that of his native strath at Kildonan. The conviction grew upon him that gold existed in Kildonan Strath, and he resolved to make the experiment. This was by no means an easy matter. Kildonan, once the seat of a large population, who lived by the cultivation of little patches of land and rearing black cattle, had since been the principal scene of the "Sutherland evictions" which took place about sixty years ago, and which have made a considerable figure in Celtic literature. The people were ousted from their ancestral holdings, very much against their own advantage, though they saved nothing but hardship in it. They were obliged to emigrate to America or settle in weather districts of Scotland; and the country was devoted to sheep-farming upon a scale which had then no parallel in the Highlands. For a stretch of twenty miles scarcely a house of any kind was left in the valley except the old church and the manse. So it remains to this day with little change; but here and there a small lodge has been erected for sporting tenants, a new class of occupants in the north; or the manse has been converted into the residence of one of the principal sheep-farmers of the district, the church being meanwhile allowed to fall very much into decay. The strath has thus been left to run into a state of nature, and Mr. Gilchrist had to make his "prospecting" from the base of the village inn of Helmsdale, about ten miles distant. He was not long, however, in finding gold: on the very first day—using no better appliances than a trowel and a tin basin—he discovered the precious metal, and immediately began making more extended investigations. It was impossible to keep the secret, and in a very short time rumors of the existence of gold began to spread, and touched the excitable imagination of the Highlanders as if by magic. This was about the month of November last. Before the expiry of the year there was a stampede to the lonely glen, hundreds of men, equipped through the solitude, carrying with them the rudimentary implements for working and washing the gold; and, after a hard day's labour, they found themselves obliged to trudge back on foot to the village of Helmsdale, ten miles distant, in order to find shelter at night and food for the morrow. The dilapidated old church once more came to be of use, scores of men huddling into it at night, and lying down upon heather beds of moss and hay in the pews; others faced the rigours of a winter night with no other protection than a blanket suspended on a pole and tied to the walls of an old sheep-pen. Some even sought the shelter of a cosy nook on the hillside with only a Highland plaid wrapped round them. As many as 500 men and lads were at one time squatting in the strath. Old diggers from Australia and New Zealand visited the diggings, bringing with them tents and improved machinery, and the search for gold came to be a recognized industry, and it became necessary to reduce to order and system. The proprietor of the glen, the Duke of Sutherland, indulged the men with almost complete freedom of speech until the beginning of the month of April, and by that time several important facts had been satisfactorily proved. It was ascertained that gold exists in considerable quantities in nearly every part of the valley of Kildonan. From the mouth of the river Helmsdale, which flows through Kildonan, for twenty miles and more, the tributaries flowing from the range of hills on the north side of the valley contain gold in greater or less abundance. How much larger the auriferous area may be found to be is still quite uncertain; but the streams upon the Caithness side of the Morven hills, the range from which the Kildonan and other gold-bearing streams are fed, are known to be at least as rich as any that were only lightly prospected in Sutherland. The Scabrean hills, as they are called, have been spoken of in olden times as a gold-bearing range, and in fact, gold has been found in the neighbourhood of Rosneath, on the river Caithness, which, as the crow flies, is about thirty miles distant from the strath of Kildonan; and is connected with the Assynt hills, quite a different range from those of the west of the county of Sutherland.

Intimation was made to the diggers that after April 1st would have to pay twenty shillings a month as a license duty for digging. Their field of operations was thenceforth restricted to three streams, those on which gold had been most abundantly found—namely, the Kildonan, the Ruinall (pronounced Shingill), and the Tornish—all tributaries of the Helmsdale river on the same side of the valley. No fewer than 303 licenses were taken out in course of the month; and, by restricting each of the diggers to a certain area, the claims were carefully worked, and were pretty well exhausted by the end of the month. At the renewing of the licenses on May 1 there was a demand for more space, and prospecting parties were sent higher up the three streams to ascertain whether it was worth while to follow up the same lead. The report was favourable; the extension of ground was allowed, and 184 licenses were taken out in the first part of the present month, which is a larger number than was applied for in the same number of days in April. Before the end of this month it was expected that the diggings would be very much crowded, for this among other reasons—that in Scotland the engagements with household servants and farm-labourers last for six months continuously, and one of the half-yearly terminations in the latter days of this month. Great numbers of workmen have been known to refuse re-engagement, with their masters in order that they may "try their luck" at the diggings; and summer having been in, when camp life is tolerable to many, it may be expected that the mining population will be increased by stray hands from all parts of the country.

CRUISE OF THE NAVAL RESERVE.

(Manchester Examiner, May 18.)

Amongst the reminiscences which surround the great naval wars in which this country has been engaged, there are few more painful, or apparently more incongruous, than those which relate to the methods employed to man the fleets. The "press gang" was in truth as much an institution as the navy itself; and, strange as it may seem to be, the victories of Nelson, Howe, and Duncan were won in a great measure by men who were literally forced from their homes and employments, as truly as if they had been negroes on the Guinea coast in the hands of the slave-dealers. To treat them as if they would be silent, dependent, and almost mutinous was a natural consequence. These were the days of the most severe discipline and hard fare. The "cat" except under first-class commanders, was in constant requisition, and how the men fought and conquered as they did is still a matter to wonder at. Perhaps the most curious story of the war came, however, from the mouth of one of the officers at that time. When his men were in mutiny, they told the admiral they would not fight; but on his replying "that he would lay them alongside the enemy, and he knew no power on earth would keep them from fighting," they quietly laughed, and went to their duty. But, easy as it was for a first-rate fighting officer to overcome Jack's scruples, it is certain that the traditions among the men of the navy unpopular among the men of the merchant service. There was much more sympathy between a seaman and a man than between the regular man-of-war's man and the merchant man. The man-of-war's man was a different being altogether. He was chiefly bred in the naval ports of the south, and was rarely recruited from the hardy seamen of the north. This distinction might be partly accounted for from the fact that the southern sailors always had a ship of war before their eyes, whilst the northern rarely looked at one, except as a spectacle; still, it is undeniable that there was a strong antipathy to the naval service amongst the seamen of the mercantile marine. The traditions of the severity of the naval sea-tigers were remembered long after the man who had felt it had passed away. There is no question at all that it was this severity which occasioned the mutiny at the Nile, and there is hardly any doubt that it helped to recruit the American navy; the man-of-war's man between this country and "the States."

It is the recollection of these facts which makes the sailing of the naval reserve squadron from Portland Roads on Saturday a matter of stirring national interest. We are told that it was a "magnificent sight" to witness the ten huge vessels of war leave Portland Roads, led by the Agincourt. Half of the squadron was made up of those sea-going line-of-battle ships which were once the glory of the sea, and half of it was composed of ironclads, before which the "three-deckers" would probably go down like a fishing-boat before a frigate. But men-of-war are much more easily built than first-class seamen can be got to man them, and it is therefore more important to the country to know of what stuff the crews were composed, than of what materials the vessels were built. As a matter of fact, there is no difficulty at all in manning the navy; but it is more the less satisfactory to know that we have a reserve which would man the navy two or three times over, if necessarily required it. It is an immense change from the old days, when the "press-gang" was in force, and even the "sweepings of the gaols" were sent to fight our naval battles. This is the suggestive fact in the sailing of the reserve squadron on a fortnight's cruise. The squadron has on board about 2,000 men and officers, and the naval reserve men belonging to the navy reserve. Probably better or harder, more experienced or more thorough seamen could not be found anywhere. They are the pick of the merchant service; and every man has voluntarily taken his place by the regular man-of-war's man. There has been no compulsion in the case. No "order" from the Admiralty called them where they are; but the naval reserve men on shore were courteously invited by the Admiralty to the strictest discipline of a man-of-war, and in a cruise where the men-of-war were brought into play. Let it be understood that these 2,000 men are but a little of the force at the service of the country, and the full advantage of our position is seen at once.

One night a judge, a military officer, and a minister, all applied for a lodging at an inn where there was but one spare bed, and the landlord was called upon to decide which had the best claim of the three. I have lain fifteen years in the garrison at sea, said the officer. "I have sat as judge twenty years in R—," said the judge. "With your leave, gentlemen, I have stood in the ministry twenty-five years at M—," said the minister. "That settles the dispute," said the landlord. "You, Mr. Captain, have lain fifteen years; you, Mr. Judge, have sat twenty years; and this old fellow has been standing up for the last twenty-five years, so he certainly has the best right to the bed."

An exchange states, as an example of imperfect orthographic acquirements, that a prize was recently offered to any member of the Connecticut Teachers' Institute who would write and spell correctly the following sentence:—"It is an agreeable sight to witness the unparalleled embarrassment of a harassed pedlar attempting to gauge the symmetry of a peeled onion, which a sibilant stabbed with a poniard, regardless of the immenseness of the likes of carnelian lute." Thirty-eight teachers competed, but not one was successful.

SERIOUS CHARGES AGAINST THE CAPTAIN OF AN ENGLISH SHIP.—The Gronde, having received the following details of the loss of the French ship Breigne, Captain Perrere, on her way from Buenos Ayres to Bordeaux. On April 21, at a point about 30 degrees south latitude and 150 miles from the coast of Brazil, she was run into by the English iron ship Explorer, bound for Melbourne, and as the English vessel was going at a speed of nine knots an hour, and the French at six, the shock was terrible, and the latter foundered in a few minutes. Meanwhile, the long boat, which was found incapable of containing the number of persons who crowded into it, and was almost immediately capsized. The crew, therefore, were left to struggle in the open sea with nothing but a few beams and planks to grasp, and after an agony of nearly an hour the captain, who had exhausted himself in supporting his wife in the water, resigned himself to his fate in consigning her to the care of some of his men who were seen clinging to the keel of the capsized boat. All this time the English ship had continued her course without paying any attention to the cries for assistance, but having also received some damage, was obliged to lie-to to repair. The shipwrecked mariners perceiving this detention managed to reach the vessel, and were received by the captain, but with a bad grace. He then sailed for Bahia, but on arriving in sight of that port, fearing that complaints of his conduct would be made and that he might be prosecuted on his voyage. They reached the land at six o'clock, having left the Explorer at two, and immediately waited upon the French Consul and made their report. [We shall bear this paragraph in mind, lest the Explorer should at any time come to Hongkong.—Ed. C. M.]

THE FAMILY HERALD. Weekly, 1d.

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "The Family Herald stands at the head of both in age and popularity, of all the penny serials."

THE FAMILY HERALD. Monthly, 6d.

The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, in reference to pure literature, says: "The Family Herald, that joy to tens of thousands of innocent English households."

THE FAMILY HERALD. Annual Volume, 7s. 6d.

The BRITISH QUARTERLY REVIEW says: "The Family Herald is well-entitled, with reference to its aims, and in various and amusing, with a fair amount of utility intermixed. Of all these weekly serials, we are inclined to consider the Family Herald the best."

THE FAMILY HERALD. Complete Set, Twenty-six Volumes, £10 5s.

The LITERARY GAZETTE says: "It must be said of the Family Herald that it is the purest reading of all purely amusing literature."

THE FAMILY HERALD. All the Back Numbers, Parts, or Volumes, are in print, and may be had by order of any Bookseller in Hongkong.

The BOOKSELLER says: "For amusing reading, such as may be admitted to each household without fear of consequences, we may recommend the Family Herald. You get portions of a well-written novel, novelette, useful information interspersed throughout. Answers to Correspondents, alone worth the money, and other matters, which will make readers either wiser or, perhaps both."

THE FAMILY HERALD. Weekly, 1d.

LEIGH HUNT in his "Autobiography," calls out over and over again, for my Family Herald, a penny publication, qualified to inform the best of its contemporaries."

THE FAMILY HERALD. Monthly, 6d.

LEADING ARTICLES AND ESSAYS.—"There is a well-considered leading article or essay, every week, upon some subject of an instructive or thoughtful character."—British Quarterly Review. "The essays are excellent specimens of strong vigorous writing."—Chatterbox Journal.

THE FAMILY HERALD. Annual Volume, 7s. 6d.

NOVELS AND TALES.—"Its Novels and Tales are quite as well written as the best circulating library stories."—Saturday Review. "Under the head of the Story Teller, we have novels and tales, simple and pure in structure, that, in the pages of the other penny serials, is the best of the other penny serials."—British Quarterly Review. "Many of its tales, if given as three-volume novels, would find their way to every reading-room and library in the kingdom."—Plymouth Herald.

THE FAMILY HERALD. Complete Set, Twenty-six Volumes, £10 5s.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.—"The editor is the confident and confidential in every station of life. The answers to Correspondents cannot be fiction, a romance and a life history, being embodied in almost each of them."—Saturday Review. "Under the head of the Story Teller, we have novels and tales, simple and pure in structure, that, in the pages of the other penny serials, is the best of the other penny serials."—British Quarterly Review. THE PERFECTED PREPARED COCOA.

MARAVILLA COCOA. Sole Proprietors, TAYLOR BROTHERS, LONDON.

THE COCOA (or CACAO) of MARAVILLA is the true MARAVILLA of LINNÆUS. Cocoa is indigenous to South America, of which Maravilla is a favoured specimen. TAYLOR BROTHERS have secured the exclusive supply of this chocolate, by the skillful application of their soluble principle and delicate machinery, produced what is not only the perfection of prepared Cocoa, but has not only secured the preference of homeopaths and doctors generally, but many who had hitherto not found any preparation to suit them, have after one trial, adopted the Maravilla Cocoa as their constant beverage for breakfast, luncheon, &c.

"A SUCCESS UNPRECEDENTED."

See following Extract from the Globe of May 14, 1868.

"Various importers and Manufacturers have attempted to obtain a reputation for their prepared Cocoa, but we doubt whether any thorough success has been achieved until Messrs Taylor Brothers discovered the extraordinary quality of Maravilla Cocoa."

"Duplicating their perfect system of preparation to this finest of all species of the Theobroma, they have produced an article which surpasses every other Cocoa in the market. Entire solubility, a delicate taste, and a most interesting matter of elements of nutrition, distinguish the Maravilla Cocoa above all others. For homeopaths and invalids we could not recommend a more agreeable or valuable beverage."

Sold in packets only by all Grocers, of whom also may be had Taylor Brothers' Original Homeopathic Cocoa and SOLUBLE CHOCOLATE.

BISHOP'S

Granular Effervescent Citrate of MAGNESIA.

Introduced and prepared by ALFRED BISHOP, Manufacturing Chemist.

17 & 18, SPARKS' BUILDINGS, MILK NEW TOWN, LONDON.

THIS perfectly white and delicately clean granular preparation possesses remarkable effervescent qualities, which far surpasses the ordinary Sedulite Powder in its cooling, refreshing, and aperient properties, as well as in its flavour as a saline draught. It is particularly well adapted for women and young children, on account of its most agreeable flavour, and its effect.

N.B.—The genuine has the name of BISHOP upon the bottle, also the Name and Trade Mark upon Label, and is sold in convenient sizes, and secured in a perfect manner that it may be shipped with safety to any part of the world.

Manufacture also of Granulated and Effervescent Citrate of Iron, Citrate of Iron, Citrate of Quinine, Citrate of Quinine and Iron, Carbonate of Lithium in Tubes, Citrate of Lithium, Vichy Salt, Sedulite Mixture, and all other Granulated Preparations.

IN CHANCERY.—CAUTION.—BISHOP'S GRANULAR EFFERVESCENT CITRATE OF MAGNESIA.—MR. BISHOP, has discovered that the Label (which he has used for the last five years) was being imitated recently applied to the COCAIN-OR, CHOCOLATE, or an ILLUSTRATION to restrain such imitation. The Injunction was immediately granted, and the Defendant was ordered to pay all Mr. Bishop's Costs and to destroy the Labels complained of.

Also, BISHOP'S New Remedy for Sea-sickness should be in the hands of every person travelling by Sea.
